

Dug's Dive®

Fresh Seafood and fine Spirits!

Welcome to Dug's Dive. William Douglas operated a rooming house and saloon in the late 1800's along the Erie Canal in Buffalo, New York.

It has been written that William Douglas was a freed or runaway slave. Early census records show a William Douglas as a ship's cook, later records show him operating his own establishment for over twenty years. Dug's Dive had a reputation as one of the toughest, nastiest joints in the world.

The word dive referring to an eating and drinking establishment actually is derived from the original location below the towpath. To gain entry, one would dive down a steep slippery staircase. The Establishment boarded groups of sailors, prostitutes and other undesireables and if one was looking for trouble, one could find plenty at Dug's. Newspaper accounts describe the place as dark and damp with a mishmash of broken cups and salvaged furniture.

On occasion the canal (which was like a sewer) would flood the establishment. The stench must of enhanced the experience. One such newspaperman, escorted by the toughest Irish policeman, described being greeted by William Douglas, or Uncle Dug as he was affectionately known, who offered him a drink or a cigar. The newspaperman politely declined. It is with these innate acts of hospitality that we remember and pay homage to a man who beat the odds – operated an establishment for over 20 years – and left his mark on the world by giving us the dive!
